The Impact of Virtual Community on Yield

Joining an Online Community Increases the Likelihood to Enroll

Higher Education Marketing Through Digital Community:
Understanding the Motivations of Joining and Participating in University-Sponsored Communities and the Effect on Yield

Background:

Online survey for admitted students at Colorado State University in 2016 to learn more about why students join admitted online communities and participate in them and the possible impacts of the participation

Findings:

Students who had a clear plan to choose a college joined the community and reported more communicative action; they also reported higher intent to enroll at the university

Impact:

Findings underscored the relationship between online community participation and intent to enroll, which supports the use of communities like Wisr (Admitted Rams Community)

Hi [redacted]

My name is [redacted]. I love climbing! I have mostly done indoor climbing, but I also enjoy outdoor climbing. Horseshoot (just 15 min from CSU) has some great bouldering. I am a 5.11/5.12 climber in the gym, but I don't recall what my outdoor range is. Are you planning to join the CSU climbing team? If so, I am looking forward to meeting you there. Lean into Student Interests and Identity to Build a Sense of Belonging

The screenshot shows a web browser window displaying the Colorado State University online communities page. The browser's address bar is not visible, but the page title is "COLORADO STATE UNIVERSITY". The navigation menu includes "Home", "Communities", "Discussions", "Events", and "Connections". A user profile icon labeled "AK" is in the top right corner. Below the navigation bar, the "Communities" section is active. There are search and filter options: "Search by name" (input field), "Featured" (dropdown menu), and "All" and "Joined" (button filters) with a plus sign for more options. Three community cards are displayed:

- Community 1: "Common Interests: Outdoor Adventure and T...". The image shows a lake and trees. It has 941 members and is Public. A "Join Community" button is present.
- Community 2: "Common Interests: Causes and Community Involvem...". The image shows a person silhouetted against a sunset. It has 245 members and is Public. A "Join Community" button is present.
- Community 3: "Common Interests: Arts, Entertainment, and Tech". The image shows a colorful quilt. It has 433 members and is Public. A "Join Community" button is present.
